

Andrew Weber to leave Macmillan at end of May

Macmillan announced today that Andrew Weber, Global Chief Operating Officer, will depart at the end of May to take a position with another company. Weber joined Macmillan in 2013.

Stefan von Holtzbrinck, CEO, Holtzbrinck Publishing Group said: “Andrew has been a loyal partner to Macmillan and Holtzbrinck, with great collegiality, human warmth and an eye for talent, all of which will ensure his legacy at Macmillan Publishers as well as at Macmillan Learning.”

Susan Winslow, President of Macmillan Learning said: “We are grateful for Andrew’s many contributions to Macmillan over the past years. His support and good humor were especially important in a year marked by the impact of COVID-19.”

Don Weisberg, CEO, Macmillan Publishers said: “Andrew’s accomplishments during his tenure are many. Most notable and recent were his leadership of the multi-year project to find and move us into our new home at 120 Broadway, and his tireless and integral contributions to the company’s response to COVID-19, which made our record year in 2020 possible. With a superb group of Shared Services leaders in place and the financial performance of our business robust, Andrew leaves us well positioned for the future.”
